Amino acid replacement and temperature effects on the folding mechanism of the frog Rnase H. The three-dimensional folding pathway of the H-containing ribonuclease from the frog Rana ridibunda has been investigated by two types of experiments. Isoform 1Rnase H, containing the consensus sequence Cys-His-Glu-Cys-Glu-Arg-Lys, can fold spontaneously into one of four folding states, depending on the salt concentration. Isoform 2Rnase H, with the consensus sequence Cys-His-Glu-Cys-Asp-Arg-Lys, has a short folding sequence rich in acidic residues and is unstable under non-denaturing conditions. The energetics of the folding of these two isoforms have been studied by high-resolution NMR spectroscopy and temperature-induced equilibrium unfolding experiments. Replacing two Cys residues with Ser in isoform 1Rnase H leads to a shift of the equilibrium to intermediate states that can not be observed in the natural sequence, in agreement with the smaller size of the precursor polypeptide. This suggests that the intramolecular interactions that stabilize the native conformation are not compatible with a folding pathway that involves intermediate conformations. The energy landscape of the folding pathway of isoform 2Rnase H is more complex. The two-state equilibrium of the stable native state is shifted toward the unfolded state at low salt concentration, and slow internal rearrangements of the polypeptide chain enable this equilibrium to be shifted toward the folded state. This observation implies that the formation of native contacts slows down the folding in certain conditions, and could involve a partly folded pre-transition state.

EXCLUSIVE The RSPCA has urged video-game enthusiasts to play out their "most violent fantasies" during the Adelaide Fringe festival. Just five per cent of all violent acts committed in Australia involve a game console. However, the RSPCA says the recent release of Splatterhouse - a horror game with the word "splatter" on the cover - as a movie has made it a bigger media issue, with the film expected to be released on DVD this week. In the video, we show what is really happening. Photo: Splatterhouse "We've been getting a lot of phone calls about it and we've received some calls about it at the station, but we haven't had many reports," RSPCA SA animal care manager Paul Benjamin said. "It's an interesting discussion for us. It hasn't become a national issue for us. "We don't think the effect of games of this nature is as big as (other) people think it is, but people do have violent fantasies." Mr Benjamin said that if someone wanted to act out a violent act, there were real world options available. "If you're going to do it, there are better ways to do it," he said. "You don't need a console - you could do it with a stick or knife or a carving knife. "It's not something that's particularly attractive, or going to show people who are observing." RSPCA spokesman Jon Jorgensen said that the RSPCA's focus was to monitor and help animals, and making the world a better place for animals. "It's great that people use their imaginations to act out their most violent fantasies, but you can do that without getting a game console," he said. "It's something you can do with blood or a knife. "But there are real world solutions for just about everything." The RSPCA said that the type of games they gave advice about were those where combat or violence was inherent in the game play. Games that were not violent, but had a disturbing theme or were about family were not the focus of their advice. "We try to focus on things such as role-playing games or war games or horror games," Mr Jorgensen said. "If you're playing something from another culture and you get really into it and understand the cultural background of
