Transferring a Photo to a New File You have two options for creating a new file. The first, and preferred, method is to open a new document and start the image editing process from scratch in that document. With this method, your new file will be identical to the original file and therefore also be flat and pixelated. If you choose this method, you can use a photo from your scanner or any other source. Figure 6.3 : Using the Open dialog box to transfer a photo to a new file In Figure 6.3, the Open dialog box is displayed in the upper-left corner of your image. Click the File Open dialog box to display the files listed in the dialog box as the default path. Select the file you want to open by clicking on it or clicking on the little plus sign next to the file name (if this option is not visible, click the View menu and click the Show Specs Pane button). Once you've selected the image file, click the Open button. Photoshop opens the image in a new document (see Figure 6.4). Figure 6.4 : Editing a scanned image in a new document

As of August, several districts in Oregon, including the Metz and Milwaukie School Districts, faced the possibility of losing some nonacademic services. Across the country, schools are facing similar dilemmas as they grapple with rising enrollment and the cost of infrastructure like school buses and teacher housing. The Rev. Nathaniel Harper, superintendent of the Metz School District, said the district has already lost 25 percent of its teaching positions to budget cuts in recent years and is looking at cuts of as much as an additional 35 percent for the coming school year. The Metz district is seeking money from the state to protect music, special education, para-educators and other support staff.
