Leland Yee, who is running for re-election in a heavily Democratic district, said that if he had a gun in his office when he was arrested for running a gun-trafficking ring, he would have shot himself to avoid going to jail. Yee was arrested this week on federal charges of conspiring to deal firearms without a license and engaging in a scheme to funnel money from illegal arms sales to overseas buyers. During an interview on Wednesday, Yee said that he has no regrets about his past decisions, even though they have led to his indictment. "When I was in my political career, I was for the interests of the people," Yee said. "And I believe we needed to have a political career, for our own protection. "I don't regret anything that I've done," he continued. "If I had a gun in my office, I would have shot myself."
