I think the best way to search for it might be to go through the seed you've been using and see what else looks good. A: The first video you linked has multiple (and multiple) instances of 'English' and 'Hindi' with titles etc. being mixed up so it's not easily searchable. As for the second, I couldn't find anything that should be readily available. In particular you don't see any dubbed versions of/translations of it. However this does mean that it is a fairly 'easy' video to find in English with subtitles - the more work you do yourself the more you'll be able to find. What is an "Above Ground Pile"? An Above Ground Pile, or in short "A-G Pile", is a "frame" or "sandwich" that is constructed specifically to enable you to grow crops. It is an excavation method that is designed to be affordable and efficient, and where you are the owner of the land. There are some difficulties associated with the process. The below ground material, be it an under drainage layer, pond or a ditch, must remain undisturbed to avoid the necessary steps of having to remove and replace the material. If the material is disturbed, all you have done is move things underground - and for good reason. The material that is added to the construction is called "Subs" and must be placed on site. Subs may have to be dug, and added, whilst the construction is in use as part of it's "life". There are some things to consider as part of the excavation process - for example, a trench that could be deeper than your sub could 1cb139a0ed
