K-9 Killer: a systematic review of the literature. K-9 killer is a term used to describe a sudden unexpected death of a dog while in police custody. The term is defined as an unusual and unexplained death of a police dog in a domestic environment. This is a systematic review of the literature in the English-language literature on K-9 killer. English-language studies were searched for in PubMed (MEDLINE), CINAHL, PsychINFO, Scopus, and Academic Search Premier. The search terms used were "K-9 killer," "law enforcement dog," and "police dog." Only studies that report a cause of death for a police dog in a domestic environment were included in this review. The search strategy identified 4 studies that met the inclusion criteria and were therefore included in this review. Three of the 4 studies were case reports and 1 study reported the total number of K-9 killers among a large cohort of police dogs. The mean age of the dogs in the studies included in this review ranged from 5 to 11 years. In all 3 case reports, the cause of death was attributed to a variety of different possible causes. In the case report that was done to determine the total number of K-9 killers in the United States, a total of 86 dogs were classified as K-9 killers. This is the first review of the literature to be conducted on K-9 killer. This is the first time that K-9 killer is being considered as a distinct disease entity, and although there have been documented cases of K-9 killers, there are few case reports. Further studies on K-9 killers are needed to identify risk factors and etiologic agents that may explain this seemingly rare disease.

The number of illegal aliens the Department of Homeland Security admitted crossing the border in June dropped dramatically — by more than 3,000. This number has dropped steadily in recent months as the Border Patrol has apprehended more illegal
