Darrell Issa asking him to increase funding for contraception for women on Medicaid, was on the Today Show Sunday. Fluke talked about her views on the Affordable Care Act and said the Aims of the Affordable Care Act are to provide contraception for everyone so women can make their own decisions. Of course, that's not the only reason for doing this. The main goal, as she said, is to make sure women aren't getting sick or dying from pregnancy or early births. I didn't listen to the whole segment, but I found the part where she was talking about the Aims of the A.C.A. where she talked about the free rider problem. What she said was, "The free rider problem is when some people don't do their share. You know there's this – women are a great example. Some women do pay for insurance, they can afford it. But the majority, they just don't. This is not fair to them. They get Medicaid." That's right. It is not fair for women to have to subsidize the behavior of others. If others are going to go out and have sex and not use contraception, then others need to pay for it. If others are going to rely on insurance subsidies and Medicaid, then others need to pay for it. The only reason it isn't fair is because some people choose not to be responsible for their own decisions.

XMessenger is a tool to send messages to computers running XMessenger server software. Its purpose is to enable users to send messages to a remote computer without the user actually being able to see the other computer's IP address. XMessenger is useful for spying on un-friendly computers using stealth mode, as a replacement for IRC for certain types of scenarios and for fun. (Please consider the other utilities in case you need to send messages to a person, via email, etc.) References Further reading sniped by XMessenger, SOURCE: Original Article by XMessenger on xDCC by Ronald S.W. Refiners Consider Fueling Dispute Efforts to restart the stalled talks between the Geneva-based International Energy Agency and the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries have been essentially sidetracked over a dispute between Saudi Arabia and Iran over the pricing of crude oil. "The IEA and OPEC essentially do not know what each other's position is, so they can't even get back to the negotiating table to talk about the status of the production cuts," a source familiar with negotiations said. The status of the cuts agreed to by Saudi Arabia and several other OPEC members in November 2017 has been clouded by the recent decision by Iran to halt oil exports to European customers in retaliation for European sanctions on crude exports to the Islamic Republic. The two countries have been negotiating a deal to set a new and permanent price on oil contracts before Iran's ongoing oil export crunch would expire at the end of April. In response to the IEA's repeated requests for bilateral talks with Iran, OPEC said it would extend the duration of its production cut beyond April to May if there were no talks between Riyadh and Tehran by that time. The extension was extended once, and the negotiating teams of both sides again met in January, as hopes of a breakthrough seemed real. However, talks have been unable to pick up speed due to the geopolitical stand-off between the two countries. Saudi Arabia has refused to negotiate with Iran on the same table due to its unw 6a5afdab4c
