Focusing Focusing is a bit difficult on digital cameras, and most come with manuals that may not be up-to-date for the latest camera models. However, with newer digital cameras, focusing has become much easier than it was with the first digital cameras, and most of them provide a very good-looking focus. You don't really need to rely on manuals when you shoot. You can get really good shots by just looking through the viewfinder. If you're thinking of shooting a special event and your camera comes with a number of different focusing options, I suggest using the autofocus. Getting good-looking results with the camera in your hand is much more important than you focusing every shot. Many digital cameras have autofocus features, and the number of autofocus points is almost always greater than that of film cameras. Check your camera's manual to see what focus points it has.

Q: Python - Pygame - How to resize canvas to fill window I've made a simple game which (for the moment) contains a square (pygame.Rect) with a background colour. This is displayed within a window. However if the window is resized this resizing seems to change the location of the square which does not fit into the window. How can I fix this? I'm using Windows and Python 3.4.3. EDIT: I would also be interested in knowing how I can have the square be at the top of the window and not the bottom. This is the code at the moment: import pygame pygame.init() screen_width = 800 screen_height = 600 screen = pygame.display.set_mode((screen_width, screen_height)) pygame.display.set_caption("Trains") clock = pygame.time.Clock() #make an object to display class_box_one: def __init__(self): #specify the position of the player on the screen self.x = 50 self.y = 50 #specify colour for background self.background = (0, 0, 0) #make a rectangle to fill the screen class_box_two: def __init__(self): #specify the position of the player on the screen self.x = 50 self.y = 50 #specify colour for background self.background = (0, 0, 0) def apply_surface(self): #create the surface that will be stored into self.box = pygame.rect.Rect(self.x, self.y, self.x, self.y) #fill the box with a black colour self.box.fill((0, 0, 0))

Q: How to query a Kafka topic given a topic id? I have a Kafka topic and a topic id for the topic. How to query this topic and get the message content? A: Kafka Connect can help on this. It comes with a component that can query topics via REST API. Refer : Q: Performant Grouped Interface in Flex? I have a tree data structure that should display some information on a per-item basis - similar to how groups work in Gmail. Is there a performant way to do this in Flex? I was trying to use groups but the datagrid doesn't seem to work well with them (especially when working with millions of records that are in hundreds of sub-groups). Thanks. A: Every collection that is tied to a scrolling list has two features that make it hard to scroll or search effectively. It must know the size of its children. This is usually done via a custom collection class that simply has a field holding the size of its children. It must be able to efficiently remove items, even when multiple items at the same index are removed. See Removing Items. To handle both 1 and 2, Flex has a feature called "item-based memory". It basically keeps the items in a list in memory, indexed by their position in the list. Whenever you remove an item, it is replaced by the previous item's offset. Whenever a new item needs to be added, it's added on top of the previous item's offset. If you don't use item-based memory, then it will need to know which items are children and which are not, which means it must iterate over the entire collection each time you need to do something. Removing items (or updates) may be extremely expensive in this model as it must iterate over every element in the list, and in a collection that has a lot of nodes, this can be a lot of work. In your case, item based memory will be an excellent solution. You simply create a custom data structure which has some extra fields that represent the group membership, and whenever you insert or update a new object into your parent
