Assessment of anti-gout activities of phenolic compounds from leek (Allium porrum L.) by a cell-based luciferase reporter assay. Allium porrum L. and its isolated phenolic compounds were evaluated for their anti-gout effects. Among the tested compounds, alliin and allicin were found to display potent anti-gout properties in vitro. Exogenous alliin was demonstrated to cause a significant inhibition of human monocyte-derived-macrophage (HMDM) IL-6 production and of osteoclastogenesis from human monocyte-derived-macrophage (HMDM) precursors in a dose-dependent manner. Allicin was found to inhibit P2X7 receptor-mediated IL-6 production by HMDM. Allicin also was demonstrated to inhibit intracellular p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase activation and caspase
