MOSCOW (AP) — Russian officials have warned of the potential for nuclear war in the Korean peninsula after North Korea claimed it has tested a hydrogen bomb on a small underground nuclear reactor in the country's northeast. The statement Saturday by North Korea's state-run Rodong Sinmun newspaper raised new questions about the country's ability to develop long-range ballistic missiles. The latest test of an H-

bomb was a first for the country. The North said its latest test of the H-bomb was to protest what it called annual U.S.-South Korean military drills which it says are rehearsal attacks against the country. Russia's Defense Ministry said Saturday that it isn't ruling out the possibility of a large-scale conflict on the Korean peninsula involving the U.S., South Korea and nuclear-armed North Korea.

In vitro effects of sodium saccharin on the viability, growth, and in vivo effects of transplanted tumors. A number of studies have shown that sodium saccharin and related food additives may promote the growth of transplantable tumors. Since some food additives have also been shown to influence the pharmacokinetics of drug treatment of neoplastic disease, the present study was conducted to assess the in vitro effects of sodium saccharin on the sensitivity of tumor cells to cytotoxic drugs. Tumor cells from the murine mammary adenocarcinoma L-1 were grown in the presence of sodium saccharin. When the growth rates of the cells in the presence of sodium saccharin were determined, the doubling time of the cells was increased by as much as two-fold. The cells were then exposed to a number of therapeutic drugs at concentrations known to inhibit the growth of murine tumor cells in vivo. The sensitivity of the cells to the cytotoxic agents adriamycin, vincristine, and 5-fluorouracil was compared to that observed in control cultures. When the cells were exposed to sodium saccharin, the inhibitory effect of each drug was increased by over 50%. Since a two-fold increase in cell doubling time is a substantial increase in the number of generations of cells exposed to such a concentration of sodium saccharin, our results indicate that sodium saccharin may be active in vivo to promote the growth of transplantable neoplasms.
