Software.Search It's the end of a nearly 50-year-old career in teaching and serving students at a public high school in San Jose, CA. I've taught my students about themselves and how they learn. I've shared with them the unexpected gifts of their brains and the messages they were born with. I've guided them into deeper and more effective ways to think about what they know and how they know it. And I've guided them as they moved through adolescence and into adulthood. This time, I'm done. I'll miss the smiles, the scowls, the laughs, the tears, and the smiles again. I'll miss the students. I won't be needed so much. Although I will no longer have students, I will continue to do what I do. I'll write books and articles about learning and teaching. I'll put into practice things I've learned about helping students to think. I'll give workshops and lectures about teaching and learning. I'll work with teachers to help them in their classrooms and share what I know with them. Besides these regular tasks, I'll also be writing books of my own. More later. Transfer of intra-uterine saccades from the first to the second year of life. Human saccades are commonly considered the most complex of all eye movements. By contrast, the generation and transfer of saccades from infancy to adulthood is still largely unknown. Using high-density electrooculography, we analyzed the properties of intra-uterine saccades (IUSs) acquired during the first trimester of pregnancy, which were then transferred to the second year of life. Data were collected with a 128-channel H-DEOG recording system in 101 healthy term newborns (37 male, 64 female; mean age, 29.4 days; range, 12-50 days). Saccadic activities were calculated automatically as either a single

The page is rendered, and a query parameter is set (from a POST variable), and a different page is called (another AngularJS application). For example, if the query parameter in the URL is "text", then the content is shown in a different template from the one used if it's not set. This is working, but I need to show different content depending on a product. The product is stored in a session variable in the first application. This is the code that I'm using to call the second application: `if (s === session.text) { $location.path("/"); } else { $location.path("/text"); }` The page rendered by the application is the same, the content is different, but the condition is not working. Does anyone know why is this not working and how can I fix it? Thanks Edit I forgot to say that the URL is and the content is contained in an iframe. A: It looks like you are using single-page apps. In that case there is a built-in way to do what you are trying to achieve. Have a look at this page: I think this will help you. UPDATE You can setup a resolve on your route like this: `$routeProvider.when('/text', { templateUrl: 'app/text`
