It was published in 1932. Plot introduction The protagonist of the story is a Viennese poet, struggling to establish himself, who is growing increasingly unhappy. He embarks upon a journey to Riga. During this journey he is swept up in waves of life and tries to "shake off" the uselessness of it all. While he is at the Riga railway station, he meets a young girl who is bound for Stockholm by way of the same train. Plot summary The plot opens with the narrator, Ferdinand Fiala, writing an article for a newspaper in which he says that he wants to travel to Riga, because Riga is his birthplace. From Riga he will travel to Stockholm, Germany, and England. Ferdinand Fiala is a semi-literate, pessimistic, and self-consciously striving Viennese poet who claims to have had three successive careers as a poet. He is settled in Vienna, where he has a summer home in a suburb. During the winter, he writes and publishes poems in Vienna, but in the summer he hopes to visit Riga and establish himself there. He first visits Leipzig. He has nothing to support himself during the winter, so he writes articles for a local newspaper (with copies being sent to the Austrian, German, and Swiss newspapers). As part of his income, the newspaper allows him to have copies of his articles printed in its magazine (of which he is the editor). In Prague, during his travels, he also writes an essay on him d0c515b9f4
