Dentists' impact of the German federal reform of dental care on oral health care for children and adolescents. The aim of this study was to examine the effects of the German federal reform of dental care for children and adolescents on the oral health status and the dental care activities of dentists. Nine focus groups were conducted with 27 randomly selected dentists, and the data were analyzed qualitatively in accordance with the basic principles of the Grounded Theory method. Oral health status was assessed using the 5-year-old and 12-year-old children's oral health questionnaire (COHOP-5, COHOP-12). The most important reason for introducing the federal reform of dental care was the children's poor oral health status. Dentists made more dental procedures available for children, which were mainly financed from a public health insurance system, and thus did not require a co-payment by dentists. As a result of the reform, dentists provided a more comprehensive oral health care for children and adolescents and, therefore, the prevalence of oral health problems decreased. Therefore, the Federal Dental Law for Children and Adolescents of May 2014 represents a political decision for dentists, which is important for modern dental care. This is particularly true for dental care policies concerning public health insurance. Wildfires are burning in Alberta and Vancouver Island. The blazes have already killed three people, destroyed hundreds of homes, closed roads and forced people to flee their homes.
