Something about the world evokes the somber and calm that we call Zen. The way the Zen can be found , particularly in nature , is that it is usually a state of being rather than doing . Retreat from a world of, for example, the noise of truck traffic , of hectic city life and of a clutter of constant messages, social events, and so on , in which no one takes time to sleep. More importantly, it is a state of stillness. Zen is exercise in sitting still and just being the car that you are at work and at your home , a state of being and doing . When we are in The Zen state , we need no more time. When we are not at Zen , we need more time. When we have more time , we want to be in The Zen state : less affective, less active, less responsive. When we are not in The Zen state , we want more time. When we have more time
