Readers' letters on fallout shelters Follow the reaction on Twitter >> Because radioactive fallout poses a health risk, can we count on your house and town to offer us "a safe harbor?" Unfortunately, there are no foolproof shelters in Southern California. The rural Sierras are a huge buffer, which protected many residents in Kern County during the Three Mile Island event. Narrow, stream- or concrete-lined valleys kept lots of people out of harm's way. But if you had to seek shelter, you must consider the hazards. Nuclear (and chemical) weapons are scattered around the world; sun, wind, and everyday dirt can all endanger you. Fallout from nuclear bombs could be as much as two miles from the blast and can follow you around. Once uranium enters the earth, it will decay for thousands of years. But this is what we have to work with at home. We need to learn how to react responsibly to a nuclear attack. We must enhance our ability to survive for as long as it takes for it to be safe to go back to our homes, or would it be better to die peacefully in a safe and secure environment? — Richard Emmerich, North Hollywood We've been hearing from a number of pro-Shelter readers who are concerned about thyroid problems. What about a readers' letter from someone who reads or heard about this issue? I've experienced a number of thyroid problems due to radioactive fallout. I am no longer radioactive and I do not have an abnormal amount of thyroid. I can sleep well in the dark and hear alarms in my house without alarming everyone else in it. — Gary M. Bishop, Pilsen During the Three Mile Island attack, lots of people jumped to conclusions that it was a terrorist attack (at least that's how the media branded it). What if the attack was by the Soviets or the Chinese? Or what if the attack was political? This country has only had one complete nuclear attack — at Los Alamos, but this one was short and all the major cities were protected. The next nuclear attack could also kill everyone. We would have very little warning and I personally wouldn't have enough time to make a last-minute dash to the basement. — Richard Odenthal, Von Nuys Read
