MEXICO CITY (Reuters) - The Pemex oil company is seeking bids to harvest a 500,000 barrel-per-day (bpd) oil field in Mexico for the first time, as it seeks to raise more cash to cover slumping production from U.S. shale. An oil well is seen in the Eagle Ford Shale oil field near La Vernia, Texas September 19, 2011. REUTERS/Steve Marcus The company has eight non-operated oil fields in the Permian Basin in West Texas and New Mexico, but the majority of its income comes from its core oil operations, mostly in Mexico, and it is seeking to raise a total of $1.8 billion. Pemex estimates that it has large reservoirs in potential fields that have a proved undeveloped capacity of 2.35 million barrels per day, according to a copy of a request for information (RFI) reviewed by Reuters. Pemex's RD$9.5 billion ($400.6 million) request for information is the largest of several auctions being held by its replacement of Chief Executive Emilio Lozoya, who has run the state-owned company since 2011. Lozoya also seeks a large raise for his remaining five-year term which ends in 2022. His compensation is expected to be north of $5 million, according to sources familiar with the new Pemex board. Pemex's CEO is president of the company. Pemex's expansion plan is linked to talks with U.S. shale companies to import oil from fields that have been developed with technologies not yet used in Mexico. The company is seeking to identify oil field operators from around the world to collaborate with on the project. Pemex has a market capitalization of $11.3 billion and has twice exceeded the $8 billion market capitalization it has in its present form. The boost to revenue and its market capitalization should be enough to boost confidence in its cash, analysts said. "Pemex has a market capitalization of >Mirroring reality in mental simulation: Testing the construction of mental simulation of action on previous experience. According to some authors, cognitive models (CM) are conceived and developed gradually as real-life simulations. This study investigated how the growing basic knowledge of an actor impacts on the course of building a mental model (MM) as a simulation of the same real-life situation. An online goal-directed motor task requiring a visuomotor response in time was conducted to 79 participants. The results showed that by increasing in time the knowledge of the to-be-performed action (i.e., the first condition), the velocity of building an MM decreased and was accompanied by the increase in the time necessary to solve a new problem. Moreover, experience-dependent learning showed a time-related decrease of speed of building an MM. This study supports the idea that "mental simulation" may be constructed and re-constructively modeled as a time-conscious process, always affected by the growing/repeating knowledge of the developing actor.

Q: On click change image source, SSRS Not experienced enough to figure this out. We have SSRS Report with an Image object inside it. The Image object has a static source defined and the report renders it fine. When the report is run through SSRS it then the image object is made into a TemplateField. In this new form of the Image object, it now has source properties for rounded corners, gradient, height / width and a few others... My question is, how can I make an on-click event for the Image, so as the report is being rendered, on a click the image will source change. The available actions and options for the report are: "Use the Image as an Image" "Place the image as a picture" "Repaint the report" (this is the option I'm looking for here) I like this option as it is the cleanest approach but all the the options available in the above are resulting in the Image object no longer being a Image object. So, how can I make the source of the image on click change? I like this option as a few of the other options will result in it changing the source to something like a RadioButton. A: This is not possible through SSRS. You would have to modify the BackgroundImage property manually through code each time the report is ran. Saturday, June 24, 2007 Katie Dewhirst,
