Q: Is it possible to use JMeter in a site I am evaluating for my employer I currently work at a company that evaluates new technologies using JMeter, JMeter is under active development, and the company believes that if we build our own applications based on agile methodologies we would be able to create better applications. I have personally made a lot of JMeter tests based on my personal needs, however I'm interested in learning how to use JMeter to our benefit for our purposes. So is there any way that I can perform the tests at the company, using a remote JMeter instance. A: There are really few restrictions/limitations for using it on your own. You need to have JDK and JMeter master jar installed on your computer. It is basically a web application, but you can make the requests either be an HTTP GET or POST, to arbitrary/random endpoints. There are many ways for you to get responses from JMeter, including JDBC, JDOM, scripting, etc. If you are truly interested in learning how to use it on your own without help, I think you should definitely get familiar with JMeter.
