Wheel rotation sensors are used for detecting relative rotational displacement of the wheels from the stopped position, which is generally connected to the vehicle body frame through the suspension system. The normal method in which the wheel rotation sensors detect the rotational amount of the wheel is shown in FIG. 1, in which the numeral 10 indicates the base or fixed portion of the wheel rotation sensor; and 20, the rotational portion or rotational shaft which is made to rotate by a wheel. Also, the numeral 30 indicates a structure which is connected to the vehicle body frame (not shown) which receives the rotational amount of the wheel and transmits the rotational amount to the sensor. According to the wheel rotation sensor, a P-MOS transistor is used as a driver to drive the rotational portion 20. The P-MOS transistor is so constructed that the source terminal is connected to a Vcc power supply which has a positive polarity. When the rotational amount of
