Learning periodontology: a complementary learning approach to pocket probing. A two-part experiment was conducted with a sample of graduating dental hygiene students. Subjects were assigned to one of the following groups: (1) pre-education control group, (2) a Traditional Attitude and Knowledge study group, or (3) a Novel Attitude and Knowledge study group. The results suggested that subjects in the Traditional and Novel groups had an increase in their knowledge of periodontal disease. There were no significant changes between the groups in the attitudes toward periodontal disease. The conclusion drawn from this study is that utilizing a new learning method combined with traditional methods may be more effective in achieving learning objectives.

Q: Why does JQuery UI's autocomplete not have a "focus" event? I am trying to develop an online address book application, and I want it to have a check box at the top where people can select their address, and when they click the check box, it will populate an autocomplete field. I searched stackoverflow for this question, but none of the solutions offered worked for me. I have resorted to making my own autocomplete, but I want to make it very simple and use JQuery UI. Is it possible to do this with JQuery? A: Simply you can use change event of the select tag: $('#select').change(function() b7e8fdf5c8
