Crawford Power Station Crawford Power Station was a coal-fired power station located in Crawford, near Grafton, in the Australian state of New South Wales. It had two units, which were closed in late 2015. The power station was owned by Macquarie Generation. Its two units received coal from the Buranda coal seam via a wagonway on the Hume Highway, which was connected to the Macarthur railway line at Redfern. It operated between 1980 and 2015. The station suffered the collapse of its roof on 23 May 2009 after the large boom on the plant's single chimney fell to the ground. In June 2015, Macquarie announced that they would close the station by the end of 2015, citing costs and the need to improve the national grid. Yeast-Derived Copper-Free Peptidoglycan Crosslink Produced by Acid Pretreatment of Saccharomyces cerevisiae. Copper-free crosslinking of glycosidic bonds in peptidoglycan (PG) is an attractive biological approach to produce natural bioactive molecules in large amounts. Herein, we present a copper-free bio-crosslinking strategy that takes advantage of the acid pretreatment of yeast cells with in situ cross-linking of tyrosyl side-chains with β -lysine to generate a copper-free peptidoglycan. We demonstrate that the acid pretreatment of yeast cell walls could efficiently activate a mild acid-hydrolyzing system that generates the peptidoglycan-cleaving endopeptidase, Sce15, and simultaneously oxidize unreacted β -lysine residues to generate reactive (α -amino)lysine residues for the coupling of tyrosyl residues of lysyl side-chains. With subsequent periodate oxidation, the peptidoglycan was depolymerized to generate carboxylic-free yeast-derived copper-free cross-linked dipeptidoglycan. This strategy enables the formation of copper-free cross-linked dipeptidoglycan with minimum disruption of cell wall architecture.Q:
