Anger at the state of bicycle lanes in Albury It was one of the things that made me move back to Australia in 2008. I remember that I caught a westward bus at Dungog and got off in the middle of the CBD. I looked up and saw Sydney's Chain Bridge ahead of me. We have a bicycle lane at Dungog, a short section on the road to the brickworks and the catholic school, but not a whole lane. From the Merri Creek viewpoint, at the rail bridge across the creek, to the tip on the other side, there's a 15 metre stretch of a bicycle lane. There's a place for us to go to the left and a place for us to go to the right. Last Sunday morning around 6:30am, I was asleep and I heard a car honking it's horn at about the rail bridge. Didn't cross the rail, but didn't move. Up and down the road. Eventually it stopped and the driver got out of his car and came towards me. He was shouting. Wanted to tell me how to cycle, how to cross the road and about how I need to move on. He was very angry at how I was in the bike lane. Turns out it was my wife's bicycle, left at the tip and not in the lane, that he was upset with. Being annoyed that it was there, he was being annoyed that there was a bike lane there. If he'd waited for an hour, I'd have
