Preoperative evaluation for partial nephrectomy. The purpose of this study is to determine the most important preoperative factors that influence intraoperative handling and outcome of partial nephrectomy. We retrospectively analyzed data of patients who underwent partial nephrectomy from November 2000 through October 2007 at our institution. We collected preoperative findings, intraoperative information, and perioperative outcome of the patients. In a period of 7 years 48 patients underwent partial nephrectomy. The study group comprised 23 men and 25 women with a mean age of 60.2 years. Mean tumor size was 3.6 cm (0.4 to 20 cm). Mean tumor weight was 159.6 g (2 to 1,775 g). Mean intraoperative warm ischemia time was 19.7 minutes (10 to 47 min). Tumor-free margins were achieved in 98.9%. The study group had 8 cases of intraoperative complications (16.7%), including 1 case of arteriovenous fistula and 7 cases of bleeding (

Prelude 494: William Barrett's Magazine I think it's time to go back to William Barrett for a recent one, as he is pretty prolific and I've always considered his musings on modern Catholicism to be quite smart and forward-thinking, even at his spiritual-intellectual-political-artistic nadir. I even met him once, when he was working at a secretarial position at a college in Yorkshire, England. I had taken a weekly paper and he had a floor near the tube station, and so I tended to meet up with him once a week for a chat and a smoke. "God's in my backpack" are the words I still recall him saying, as he peddled off to whatever assignment his day of work sent him forth. Lord, the fun we had.Anyway, here's some William Barrett, for this one. I assume you can follow some of the more recent excerpts on his blog, if you'd like to. After all, he carries a few people's work along now, and carries a strong load of his own. "If I get a day of good weather on the summit, I want to be on it. It's a good feeling when you're on the summit. On good days the whole universe seems to spread out before you and away from you: the world has a depth and a spaciousness which can't

As a continuation of the work presented in the first part of this article, the conceptual basis of a decision-making model is proposed. The model is oriented to the practical applications of the results obtained in the analysis of the problems arising from the analysis of work on the respiratory care unit in a hospital. The methodological elements of the model include the definition of the vision of health care service and of the description of structures. The model provides a mechanism of analysis and of the definition of the goals and of the solution. The practical aspects of the model are represented in a diagram.--- author: - | Zeyu Miao[1], Bruce Abbott[2], François-Xavier Bonneau[2].\ [Xiaolong Ren]{}[3], Ting Liu[3], Richard Zemel[3] and Li Cheng[2]\ [1]Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh, PA, 15213.\ [2]Intel Corporation, Hillsboro, OR 97124. One tip that might help. I had similiar frustrations to the game having a deathly cold environment and extremely loud background music. I found by lowering the sound and turning it down to a reasonable level helped a lot. Hope you have some more content and features in the near future. :) Eindbestand 12 Nov 2013, 11:18 AM Awesome game! I haven't been this excited about a game in a while, when will the next level release? kyobiudy 12 Dec 2013, 6:21 AM Nicely done! I'm sure the next level will be really nice. I can't wait for the next level to be released! :thumbsup:Q: update all related entities in one go using Entity Framework Code First I am using Entity Framework Code First in a project. I want to do some bulk updates in one go. For example, I have a table called "Entities" with the following fields: EntityId Name Value And a table called "Assignments" with the following fields: EntityId Name Value And a table called "AssignmentEntities" with the following fields: EntityId Name Value For each row in the "Entities" table I want to look up in the "Assignments" and "AssignmentEntities" table for a matching row, increment its "Value" field by 1, then insert a row into the "

-Labor Movement The American Farmer-Labor Movement, also known as the Farmers' Alliance and the Labor and Leisure Movement, was a progressive political organization in the United States during the nineteenth century. It was organized to advocate for the interests of farm tenants in an effort to organize them on a nationwide basis. Led by such stalwarts as author, editor, and businesswoman Abby Kelley, the movement was a forerunner to the national Farmers' Alliance, and inspired the creation of the American Federation of Labor. The dynamic leaders of these entities were, by the end of the 19th century, outmoded by another progressive movement with romanticistic roots in Nationalism and socialism. Background American agriculture had yet to have a self-sustaining, fully developed system, as its intensive nature demanded a continuing input of capital and labor to keep the process going. Arguably the first crop ever to be exported, the profits from tobacco, were soon followed by those of cereal grains and then cattle, which fueled the profitable harvesting of such crops as cotton, as well as various herbs and fruits. With the national growth in wealth during the 18th century, the desire to purchase finished work over costs and attain a comfortable lifestyle in the process began to grow. American farmers, or "yeomen", were generally happy to produce their own food and build their own homes, but as the environment of their worksite changed, they were faced with increasingly casual labor contracts, low wage rates, and large stints of time spent at their workstations. Desiring to own their work and become independent of this debt-captivity, they began to organize themselves into strong networks. Tenant farmers in England attempted early to organize to this end in the late eighteenth century, occasionally becoming involved in violent clashes with their landlords, but in the United States these farmers had little concern for sharing their situation with wage-earning factory workers, more interested with the threat that centralized government could pose on the freedom of their independent trades. An emerging agricultural industrial complex beginning with steam plows in the American Midwest, and feeding on immigrant labor shipped in from Ireland, pushed the average American farmer to the brink of starvation by the end of the 19th century. In an effort to ensure its place at a worktable, the tenant farmer organized to prevent the consequences of a wage-slave market and plant labor on a mass scale. The group was known as an early example of labor at a state level organizing and went into trials in such states as
