What's new in Marlow Briggs And The Mask Of Death:

Marlow Briggs and the Mask of Death is a 2010 American-Canadian science fiction horror thriller film directed and written by Leigh Whipper, and starring Donal Logue, Joe Millson, Ian McShane, Tzi Ma, and Robbie Amell. The film is based on the short story "Marlow Briggs and the Mask of Death" from the anthology magazine The Shadow (anthology) and follows a scientist and a criminal being pursued by a distorted version of the scientist's deceased psychiatrist, who is secretly obtaining help to re-emerge himself as the ultimate murderer. Plot A man wearing a clown mask, duct tape, and a robot outfit stalks through the woods and kills some zombies. Deep in the woods another clown, this one without the mask, hands a medical trunk to Marlow Briggs. Briggs writes about his discovery of a "living Frankenstein" in an article for The Shadow magazine and is approached by the psychiatrist responsible for the discovery of the creature, Dr. George Hatchet. Hatchet claims the clown is at University of Maryland, but Tucker, the computer specialist for the lecturer, says Hatchet's claim is wrong and that the clown was a fake. Hatchet finds the article and hires Tucker to silence Marlow so he and some of his colleagues can use the creature for their own gains. Back at Hatchet's, Briggs is called to give Marlow's phone number to a student, Connie, as part of her college course work. She still thinks of Marlow as a friend even if they weren't best friends. Marlow tells her about his discovery and uses the phone. When Connie attempts to leave, she is attacked by the creature. Briggs breaks the window and begins attacking the clown with a bayonet. Afterwards, he realises the phone is not working. While Briggs is killing the clown, the creature's mask dies on the lake nearby. Hatchet and Tucker go to retrieve the mask and Hatchet discovers Marlow has been killed. He begins his prison escape back to university, but stops when he passes Marlow's body. Tucker tells him about the college newspaper saying the clown was at UMD. Hatchet goes to the college and murders all the students in the newspaper. He then snaps the neck of the news reporter. Tucker concludes that Hatchet is in disguise and Tucker makes a run for the campus police station. He is shot after entering and an officer forces the creature to retreat. The police officer turns out to be the lecturer
