The present invention relates generally to golf clubs and, more particularly, to a golf club head having a planar face and a rear cap having improved resistance to cracking. A well-known golf club head model, the Fairmont model, was designed in 1991 by Donald Ross and has become one of the most popular golf club head models for driving distance. Like other golf club heads, the Fairmont model includes a metal club head body defining a sole plate, a front face, a crown, a toe portion and a heel portion. In the Fairmont model, the body includes a generally rearwardly and downwardly extending sole plate portion, a generally frontwardly extending toe portion and a generally upper upwardly extending heel portion. A toe cap is bonded to the toe portion and a heel cap is bonded to the heel portion to define a front face opening for receiving a golf ball. A face mask and a plurality of "high-backs" are bonded to the front face of the body portion in order to reinforce the front face, and a rear cap portion is bonded to the rear of the body portion to provide stability and rigidity to the head. A desirable feature in the rear cap of the Fairmont model is its resistance to cracking.

Because the rear cap is
