Terraces, with their access to open space, and massive walls of greenery and stone are a highly sought-after property in the capital. A developer in Delhi has reserved three to four apartments in the seven-storey, residential building in Janakpuri for sale. With only nine such units available, and waiting for close to four years, the developer is ready to engage the services of a price negotiator. "A few reputed property consultants have called and expressed their interest in the flats," said Manish Sharma, an agent in connection with the building. "Sale has not started yet. The developer has advertised in the newspapers on at least two occasions." The building is being developed by Shivani Group and will have 290 flats and 312 car parking slots. The seven-storeyed building will be located at Village Road, with six storeys of residential flats that are priced between Rs 22,500 and Rs 85,000. A plot of 3,000 square meters near the Yamuna Expressway has been given by the Delhi Development Authority for a Rs 70- crore Vaastu-compliant project. With a green belt area of 10,000 square metres and a view of the open space and the Chandni Chowk metro station, the land is on the edge of the Delhi-Ghaziabad section of the Yamuna Expressway. A separate management office has been set up for the project, which is being designed by Shree Krishna Patel Architects and named by the DDA as Chandani. The villas will be ready for possession by mid-2012 and be sold by the end of 2012. The developer was to set up an IT office on the 13,000 sq. m plot. Sale guidelines In compliance with the Delhi Development Authority (DDA) guidelines, the developer may have to provide amenities such as a swimming pool, a tennis court, a football or squash court, and a table tennis or badminton court. But the DDA guidelines do not specify what else is mandatory, leaving residents dependent on the builder to design their residence. As it is in Janakpuri, the DDA will also not allow building higher than six storeys, and will also allow trees in the building for its restoration, subject to no tree falling on the road or other inconveniences. In this case, the developer will have to plant 50 trees in the space

Evolutionary origins of the looped (beta/gamma) DNA-binding domain in transcription factors. The type II DNA-binding domain has been identified in a wide variety of transcription factors of prokaryotes and eukaryotes. The recently discovered zip1 gene of the slime mold Dictyostelium discoideum codes for a protein with a type II DNA-binding domain, which recognizes a palindromic sequence.

Moreover, several other genes of the above species encode proteins with an atypical type II DNA-binding domain, which recognize target DNA in a looped form. In the present study, we have analyzed the possible evolutionary origins of these different domains. We show that: (1) type II

DNA-binding domains from different organisms may be of at least two different origins, one being homologous to the zip1 gene product; (2) the zip1 gene product is apparently the result of a fusion between the above described atypical protein-DNA interface and the DNA-binding domain of the Drosophila homeotic gene, Ultrabithorax. Moreover, the zip1 gene product is probably the result of a fusion between a type II protein-DNA interface, as found in the repressor from the bacteriophage lambda, and the DNA-binding domain of the above Homeobox protein, Ultrabithorax. We propose that the homeobox domain functioned in the early phases of the evolution of the type II DNA-binding domain. This article is part of a Special Issue entitled: Transcription factor structure and regulation, edited by John Helin. image showing a fusion of additional DMR elements with the TrkA promoter, which is illustrated in two-step synthesis (panels A and B). The numbering is based on the TrkA gene sequence (GenBank accession
