"In order to continue to provide the customer with quality soft drinks, we have determined that it is in our best interest to discontinue the customer's relationship," Wendy's wrote in a letter to its franchisee. The franchisee, Aloha, Hawaii-based Aloha Beverage, filed suit against Wendy's in Honolulu Circuit Court on Thursday. Wendy's spokesman Rick Mendoza would not say exactly how many franchises the chain owns, but it has 36,000 in the U.S. Aloha Beverage is seeking to become the first franchisee to win a lawsuit against a fast food chain over subpar food or service, Mendoza said. Aloha Beverage said the next step is to seek class-action status, which means other franchisees could join in the suit as a group. Mendoza said Wendy's will then oppose class-action status. "The issue is we want to be in business with Aloha Beverage. They are our best franchisee," he said. "And they have been stuck in a very bad position now for some time." Aloha Beverage has received "continued consumer complaints about the quality and taste of the product," Mendoza said. "In order to continue to provide the customer with quality soft drinks, we have determined that it is in our best interest to discontinue the customer's relationship." The lawsuit seeks to recover more than $8 million in unpaid rent and other fees to the franchisee. "When an investor sues you it's generally for something about which you're absolutely not responsible," said George Uzibay, Aloha Beverage's lawyer. "This is a classic example of that." Aloha Beverage had signed a multi-year, multimillion-dollar franchise agreement with Wendy's International and was running the plant until it stopped on June 25, 2019. "They have had plenty of time to fix all these problems. They were completely within their rights to do it," Uzibay said. Aloha Beverage estimated that the company had been running the plant for six months. The lawsuit says the company owes an unpaid minimum of more than $1.6 million in rent and training fees. Mendoza said Wendy's never
