The CPA - an organisation that opposes gay marriage - requested the information. A judge had already decided the information should be handed over. Warburton, the MP for Devonport and Torbay, appeared on the show last month. It was broadcast on 26 September, the day after the judge heard an appeal case at the Court of Appeal. The MP came under fire for appearing as a guest on the programme, held at the All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club, in London. A spokesman for Ofcom said it had referred a number of complaints to the CPA because it was unable to verify the information it had requested. 'I have the right to speak' The hearing had been due to last just two minutes, but the CPA said it took almost seven hours. The court ordered the MP to pay £6,000 as costs and expenses. In August the Justice Secretary, Ken Clarke, said that Warburton's comments were not in breach of broadcasting rules and he should be allowed to host the programme. On Thursday, the CPA said the decision was a "humiliation" and was seeking to overturn the decision. The statement from the organization said: "His comments are contrary to the UK Human Rights Act
