1. Start Photoshop. When you open Photoshop, you should see the Welcome screen with your name at the top. If it doesn't appear in the list, click the File Open dialog box. If you don't have an image ready for use, you can select File New. Type a name for the file. Press Enter. A new document opens that represents your starting point. The status bar at the bottom of the screen reports that you're starting from scratch. 2. Resize the document using a trackpad or mouse if you prefer. 3. Click the Eyedropper tool icon, located in the bottom toolbar (see Figure 19-1). The eyedropper tool enables you to select an existing color in your image. The cursor changes from an eyedropper to a light-gray pencil, making it easy to select color. 4. Click the light gray pencil in the upper-right corner of the canvas to select the first pixel of the document's canvas. A color tag appears at the top of the screen. As you continue to select pixels, the tooltip tells you the name of the color. 5. Press and hold the Delete key to deselect all of the colors that you've already selected. A dialog box appears, confirming that you're selecting an element on the canvas. A drop-down menu appears, allowing you to deselect the rectangle or deselect all of the pixels you selected. 6. Press the Delete key to delete the area of pixels from the document. If you accidentally delete pixels, you can immediately press Ctrl+Z (⌘-Z on the Mac) to undo your action. 7. Press Enter (Return on the Mac) to save your starting point. Photoshop saves the document and closes the screen. FIGURE 19-1: The eyedropper tool can help you find color in your image. Photoshop has multiple tool palettes and tool buttons on the top toolbar. Some tools work on color, and some work on layers or masks. These are a few of Photoshop's most useful tools: _Filter_ (Filter Draw)_ This tool is found on the toolbar's upper-right corner. Click the Apply button to apply one of Photoshop's filters to

Relationship between activity and fecundity in a gynodioecious population of Alternanthera philoxeroides. In gynodioecious populations of Alternanthera philoxeroides, the proportion of hermaphroditic plants is regulated by the number of flowers and percentage of hermaphrodites in the population. As a consequence of this sex allocation strategy, females are associated with a net decrease of propagules. We assessed the relationship between activity and the proportion of hermaphrodites in the population using a pollination experiment. We quantified flower production on the inflorescences of four plants in each of 79 inflorescences of two populations of A. philoxeroides. This corresponded to the total number of inflorescences available per plant. We also assessed the plant size and seed production of these plants. Hermaphrodite activity and flower production were unrelated. In contrast, shemaphrodite frequency, plant size and seed production were affected by the population tested. Thus, these traits were good proxies of hermaphrodite frequency. The seed production of hermaphrodites decreased with the number of plants expressing hermaphroditic flowers on the inflorescence, indicating that flower production per unit of plant size increased with hermaphrodite frequency. The total number of fruits produced per inflorescence was not determined by any of the other traits tested, except by inflorescence diameter. Thus, the control of inflorescence-related seed production in gynodioecious populations of A. philoxeroides appears to be provided by the inflorescences themselves, and not by other organs.

Q: asp.net mvc: how to simulate a 401 (unathorized) error i'm working on an asp.net mvc3 app and have to make sure every action has a json format error message. Ideally, the error message would be a proper HTTP request when the end user sends incorrect data, i.e. a 400/401/403 response. However, i'm not sure if i can make a HTTP request directly in javascript. So, i'd like to be able to give the user the 401 error if he/she sends data that is invalid. Is there any way to achieve this? Thank you
