What's new in Elden Ring:

Today, developer inXile announced that it intends to relaunch the classic Planescape: Torment, a classic RPG with deep prose and thousands of choices. The Planescape: Torment that most fans know is the isometric turn-based RPG; however, a PS1-era update being planned for the game will allow it to appear in HD form on PC. A little more than a year ago, inXile expressed interest in relaunching it and the development team is getting closer. Here's what they said at the time:

"We've tried to think how we would be most effective at fulfilling each aspect of the original and offer those things as a base for us to expand upon for the modern gamer. For example, the battle system is isometric so we wanted to translate it well to action and allowing you to use cover is key to what makes Planescape: Torment what it is. There are a lot of that kind of think we can do just by themselves and provide a modern and modern audience without the baggage of the licensing/computing power a PS4 or 360 can provide." "While being able to translate isometric battles will be an important component of the experience, the larger focus will be on adding more choices, adding more dialogues and presentations, and to try and make a much more modern version of what existing fans feel from playing the original. The episodic nature also provide meaningful value for the experience over a longer period if there are some unforeseen complications that arise."

Q: How to select string until a string is found I want to be able to select a line until a specific string is found. Something like this: String X = "a b a "; String Y = "b"; String Z = X.before(Y); This should result in the line "a b a " because it finds "b" before "a b a " Also, this should be case insensitive. Thanks! A: Here's a simple implementation using regular expression private String before(String s, String key) { Pattern pattern = Pattern.compile(key); Matcher matcher = pattern.matcher(s); if (matcher.find()) { return matcher.group(1); } return s; }

A double-blind trial of intraventricular injections of hyaluronic acid in children with hydrocephalus. Intraventricular injection of hyaluronic acid was used to improve slit ventricle size in pediatric hydrocephalus. Twenty-nine children (median age 5 months) were prospectively studied. Ten children were randomized to receive 0.15 ml of hyaluronic acid injected via a ventriculo-atrial shunt and 9 children received an equivalent volume of saline. Spinal fluid was withdrawn for determination of protein, and the human papillomavirus type 16 (HPV 16) titre was determined. Follow-up after 6 weeks indicated that the hyaluronic acid group had a higher incidence of reduction of the spinal fluid protein level and a significantly reduced mean post-injection HPV 16 titer.
