influences cancerous tumor growth on melanoma skin. Haptoglobin-2 and haptoglobin-3 have been recently found to be genetic markers of haptoglobin-1. Haptoglobin-2 is significantly more prevalent in patients with metastatic cancer than in normal subjects, and its expression is correlated with prognosis in patients with gastric and colorectal cancers. To understand the relationship between haptoglobin-1 and haptoglobin-2, we examined their expression on melanoma-bearing skin. The numbers of infiltrating haptoglobin-2 positive cells in the invasive front of tumor were significantly higher than in the tumor center, but were similar to those of haptoglobin-1 expressing cells. Our findings indicated that haptoglobin-2 positive cells seem to participate in the inhibition of tumor growth by promoting infiltration of inflammatory cells into the tumor environment. A device and a method for feeding a longitudinal or wavy strip which is detached from a strip roll to a further processing machine such as a printing machine or a bar feeder are known. The strip is gathered together in cooperation with a feed roll. Then, it can be transferred through the feed roll which is supplied by a tape roll or a finished tape roll which is detached from the roll roll. A further device and a method for feeding a strip are known, where at the end of the strip a feed roll is applied which is supplied by a roll roll. In the trailing region of the strip a gap of predetermined size is left between the strip and the feed roll. Then, the feed roll and the strip are fed with each other and an output roll is rotatably driven and arranged below the strip so that the strip is wound up on the output roll. A device and a method for feeding a tape in which a strip made of textile material is supplied by a roll and in which the strip is held in this state between a feed roll and an output roll are known. The output roll is usually driven but it can also be driven by a drive belt which is coupled to the output roll and is circulated through an idler wheel or roller. In any case the strip is fed to a further processing machine such as a printing machine or a bar feeder. In the further processing machine
