European Space Agency has unveiled a new robotic mission to study near-Earth asteroids and comets in three ways. The mission is to be known as BepiColombo, and it's targeted to launch in 2018. As part of the mission, two spacecraft—one around 16 feet wide, the other a bit larger than a small motorcycle—will orbit the Moon, waiting for a near-Earth asteroid that will be near to Earth's orbit. An even bigger spacecraft, the size of a tennis court, will fly around the asteroid. The three spacecraft will close in on the asteroid and the Earth, moving it into the Earth's path. Then the Earth and the two spacecraft will come together, and the spacecraft will fly back in the opposite direction through the same path. "BepiColombo's current architecture was developed in a highly collaborative process within ESA," Simonetta Di Pello, head of the BepiColombo Science Operations Team, said in a statement. "The initial system concept has been through rigorous analysis, and the result is a very robust design, which is hard to accomplish without broad international collaboration." Exploring near-Earth asteroids is a logical next step for the Europeans, as they began long-term observations of the moon back in the 1970s. The European Space Agency (ESA) has also been working on the long-term observations of the moon. The first European astronaut, German astronaut Thomas Reiter, has been living on the International Space Station since March of last year. The ISS's habitation module has been filled with food and equipment needed for continued operations, even though there are currently no plans to go back to the moon. Exploring near-Earth asteroids was also a possibility for NASA, but the agency canceled its similar asteroid exploration mission in 2015, after it estimated it wouldn't have enough money left in its budget for a launch in 2018. In the same vein, the U.S. began a similar project, but has had problems meeting funding deadlines. NASA's goal is to send humans to asteroids by 2025, in part so they can study them up close and build technology 0cc13bf012

No. 6,047,269 includes a window-less bottom panel assembly that is shaped generally to conform to a contoured steering wheel. A hinged cover panel may be installed and locked in place against the bottom panel so that the cover panel may be pivoted to expose an electronic display or operational surface on the bottom panel. However, the bottom panel assembly includes a number of separate components and fasteners, including a rigid or flexible support wall, a flexible membrane, and a rigid hinged cover panel. These parts must be assembled and mounted to the bottom of the steering wheel, which may require several installers. The resulting product may also be costly and take longer to produce than desired. The Self-Contained, Self-Locking Touch Control Apparatus described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,518,965 includes a number of components including a hinged cover and a frame assembly that is fastened to the upper side of the cover. The cover may be pivoted to an open position to expose the frame assembly. However, such a device may be overly costly and complicated to fabricate and assemble. The Information Display Interface Apparatus described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,390,260 includes a hinged cover panel and frame components that are fastened to the inside of the cover panel. A circular opening is provided in the cover panel to permit access to a display device or informational display. However, such a device may be overly bulky and complicated to manufacture. The Touch Panel Interface Device described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,286,067 includes a hinged cover panel that is mounted to a window-less chassis
