United States, we now have the equivalent of the FBI in Washington. And just as the FBI keeps big Brother closer at hand, the Pentagon has its own CIA, called the Joint Forces Command. The Joint Forces Command, or JFCOM, recently sent out a call for contractors and agents. In particular, the Joint Interagency Antiterrorism

Coordination Center wants public-private partnership experts who can "accelerate the adoption of proven enterprise solutions." It's not clear exactly what JFCOM intends to do with the plan. But people are well-aware what the agency is meant to be - the military's in-house version of the FBI. But the NSA and the Pentagon still have some serious growing up to do in terms of reforming themselves. As they are, the agencies are a menace to digital privacy, digital security and the freedom to communicate and transact online. They are also responsible for carrying out a policy of "collect it all," indiscriminately sifting through vast quantities of telephone, email and other data in the name of national security. Despite the Internet being the "nervous system" of the economy, the Pentagon appears to be working on ways to literally destroy it. In the United
