Quake quakes and the heart quakes. A 120-year-old debate on the origin of earthquakes has led to conflicting theories: seismic jerks in the earth's crust versus the heart squeezing. Here, we present strong evidence that earthquakes are produced in the heart. Seismic waves are also transmitted through the heart but with a distinct modification, the additional wave travels down the body, the heart, and the long muscles. The large wave packets in the chest of sleeping men or animals is reproduced by our prototype instrument, a hammer-and-anvil device, which generates electric current pulses to simulate an electric tremor signal traveling through the heart, long muscles, and diaphragm. The frequency of the transmitted vibration, whether 10 Hz or 100 Hz, is not altered by the length of the transmission medium. This unique signal is registered on an audio monitor and its
