One thing that sets Photoshop Elements apart is how it handles layers. If you've done any photo editing before, you've probably come across an image with layers that have been shifted or the image has been mirrored. Both of these problems occur when the software has been editing a layer without closing it first. Layers allow you to create and edit each element of your photo or graphic in a discrete way. When you create a layer, you're creating a new copy of an object or part of an image. In most other graphics programs, any edits you do to a layer will affect the image. In Photoshop Elements, you can keep your changes separate by using layers. Getting the most out of Photoshop Elements Another problem with Photoshop Elements is that it can be difficult to set the correct file size when exporting an image. If you select a lower resolution and Save for Web & Devices, the image will be compressed at a preset level. In this case, a 72dpi @ 300dpi image will be saved as a 72dpi @ 300dpi image, and the resulting image will have much lower resolution than it should. This issue is particularly applicable to images that have been edited in Photoshop Elements. When you open the same image in Photoshop, the image's resolution will automatically update to the default setting of 72dpi. A resolution of 72dpi is generally too small to print at. Printing a 72dpi image on a high-quality printer will result in an image that is too small to be meaningful. This is why Photoshop Elements can result in unnecessary file sizes. How to create layers in Photoshop Elements To create a new layer in Photoshop Elements, click Image > New Layer. This will make a new layer underneath the active layer, and an icon with a small red number will appear beside the layer. To make a new layer and name it something different, click and drag the icon with the small red number onto the layer you want to create a new layer for. To remove a layer, simply click the layer once and the red number will turn blue. To remove a layer and return it to the active layer, simply click the layer again and you will return to the layer's original location. Speaking to CNN's "State of the Union," Manchin said that he told Trump that he would not support the administration's position to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem if the money for the effort was not matched in Congress. "I told the president, I said, 'Mr. President, you can put Jerusalem in that bill, but you cannot walk away from the other part of your promise and not match the money, or I'm going home,'" Manchin said. ADVERTISEMENT He added that he came to the White House a year ago and "I said I'm gonna be your friend, I'm going to support you, and you support me." He added that he would support the president in "earning everything you've earned." Manchin's comments come after Trump said Sunday that he thought West Virginia Sen. Joe Manchin would support Trump's plans to roll back gun laws. "I think you'd have a couple Republicans that would vote with us," Trump said of gun control legislation on "Fox News Sunday." Manchin has been one of the most vocal Democrats in the Senate to support stricter gun laws. He is facing a tough reelection fight in 2018, and has distanced himself from progressive Democrats who are embracing extreme positions. Last week, he tweeted that he thought Vice President Pence was "doing an excellent job." "Thanks for the kind words, @VP. Others want to act, this is why I'm so grateful you and Mike are here to

Say Hello to the New HSE! Friday, August 30th, 2019 at 12:33pm Share with Email sending now... Thank you for sharing! Your article was successfully shared with the contacts you provided. Fenret is pleased to announce the launch of the new HSE. We're moving to our new office at the start of September, and this is the first step of a major program to make sure that the future of Health Sciences Education is best-in-class. The HSE is much more than just a new name; it's a new entity, a new vision, a new curriculum, and a new track record. We are confident that new HSE is better, faster, and cheaper to create, and is founded on the principles of learning, collaboration, best-in-class thinking, sustainability and innovation. It is the culmination of discussions with faculty, students, alumni and parents. The consultation, which involved more than a thousand HSE stakeholders in Alberta, found common ground on many features such as more grading options, more integration of educational theory and research, and the expansion of elective programming. The result is a curriculum program that is learner-centered and will expand opportunities for students to specialize, while satisfying societal needs for health-care professionals. At the center of HSE is a major curriculum revision, due to be implemented in the fall of 2019. The new and redesigned program will introduce new learning environments and curricula that are learner-centered, place more emphasis on small-group activities and simulations, and promote more collaboration between faculty and students. As part of our exploration of new learning environments, we partnered with Tech Education, a strategic innovation and technology company in Edmonton, to create a custom learning management platform called Canvas in a box. The Canvas platform is a leading content management system used across the world by hundreds of organizations for the management of learning, teaching, and assessment. The new HSE will also provide curriculum at a variety of levels, from undergraduate to professional and graduate, in fields such as medicine, nursing, pharmacy, and others. We are in the midst of an exciting planning phase for the delivery of the first batch of HSE new graduates, including a project that will build and deliver approximately 800 new learning materials. Our new curriculum and learning environment will deliver better outcomes for students; new learning materials for the HSE; and a new
