Jan 05, 2011 · I'd be looking for a program that'll let me design in 3D and then save it out for use in Photoshop. Determinants of the amount of labour force participation among 45-60-year-old disabled women and men in an 11-year follow-up study. To study the determinants of the amount of labour force participation (LFP) among 45- to 60-year-old individuals with and without disabilities. An 11-year prospective observational study from 1991 to 2002 in an inner city. Disability was studied using the ICF model and LFP using the Labour Force Survey among individuals with and without disabilities (n=1819). Disability contributed to 59.6% of LFP attrition among the disabled and 89.3% of the nondisabled. The odds ratio for LFP among the disabled was 1.4 (95% CI 1.1 to 1.8) compared with the nondisabled. The probability of LFP among those with disabilities was significantly lower than those without disabilities, with and without adjustments. Among the disabled, employment was more likely for men and the employed were more likely to work part-time. These results add evidence to the theory that the amount of LFP among people with disabilities is reduced.Q:

Variance between 2 SQL statements from different databases I am reading a book about SQL performance. On one page is a statement that says that when inserting a row into a table, the result set is always smaller if you include the primary key in the statement. I can't find any reason for this. I tried it out using two MySql databases. I got different results. If I create a table and put the ID int(8) the average execution time of the statement was ~24 ms in the real life database and ~47 ms in the test database. In the real life database it was still faster by ~10 ms without the primary key. Can someone explain to me why it is that the result set is smaller? Note that I'm using MySql 5.0.47 My statement to insert data: INSERT INTO table (id, text) VALUES (1,'something'); Result set with id: 1 Result set without id A: There are two possible reasons for this. First, you have computed the column value in the INSERT statement and not INSERTing it into the table. Second, you have not specified a
