The Max Payne 2 is a great game with a lot of surprising. In a giant restaurant, people are eating and drinking and usually after a lunch time meal, they might want to eat dinner and drink a little more. Now, you don't have to worry about eating late into the night because after 12 p.m. on a weekday, you can get delivery at a chain fast-food restaurant or at a grocery store chain. The chain is Panera Bread. The Atlanta-based company announced the new delivery service in partnership with Fast Company, a brand consultancy and research company. The announcement came earlier today. "We are excited to launch a delivery service with Panera Bread," Panera CEO Alex Breakstone told The Huffington Post. "It's really a play on our Panera Rewards loyalty program. It's a way to deliver something that we know is a great experience and also reward Panera Rewards members.” Panera Rewards members have access to a free one-hour delivery service and order in five to 10 locations in a predetermined radius. You can order from the restaurant’s website, the Panera app, or the Panera mobile app. In addition to food items, Panera’s delivery service will offer groceries like milk, eggs and bread. There are no delivery fees. “Fast Company is tapping into a niche that was previously untapped to deliver a great experience,” Breakstone said. “Restaurants like ours have never been able to offer fast, convenient delivery, so this seems to be a pretty big deal for us. Fast Company also brings a level of credibility and trust that isn’t there for our competitors. We’ve done mobile coupons before, we’ve done order ahead, but none of it really added up to this.” Breakstone said that Panera will begin rolling out the delivery service on Monday, Dec. 13. I looked online and checked out the company’s website. I didn’t see anything regarding a delivery service. But I called a few people who know about the delivery service. They told me
