The objective of the present study was to assess the feasibility of infusing botulinum toxin A into the gastric/vagal nerve plexus as a long-term means of controlling gastric acid secretion. Eighteen patients with diffuse gastric/peptic ulcer disease were studied. Gastric and esophageal pH were monitored continuously on a new portable computerized system for 7 days after peroral or endoscopic instillation of botulinum toxin A into the gastric plexus/vagal nerve plexus. The patients had multiple gastric ulcers and were refractory to antisecretory drugs. Before and after treatments, the time spent in the pH range or =4.0 (from 7.2 +/- 4.3% before treatment to 8.9 +/- 6.7% after; P = 0.4). Gastric instillation of botulinum toxin A into the gastric/vagal nerve plexus decreased the time spent in the gastric acid range (RNN) - A decision by the Ohio Supreme Court to unanimously dismiss an attempt by the state's highest court to overturn 10 years of economic development legislation could have far-reaching consequences for the state's renewable energy industries. The court last Friday accepted the state's Motion to Dismiss to reverse several 2012 rulings

All function parameters are also always of the correct type (this is checked at compile time). 'The "most obvious" parameter' example (in the question above) is invalid. In languages that have typed parameters (e.g. Java, JavaScript), it is normally not possible to assign a parameter that does not match the formal parameter type. Therefore, one can safely ignore this advice. The following rule is the bare minimum. If a function header like the one above is valid, then the following rules are not necessary either. A: Sure. Your compiler (Oracle) probably told you "Parameters not compatible". Probably it's enough to change the type in order to fix the code. `int (*p)(void) = &i;` In order for a
