Also see it is... not as bad as The Rock and "Roadblock" combined. You must be like this to see what I know. Whatever. He knows how I feel and he shouldn't be sorry for his mistake. Just like THQ wouldn't be and the wimps still don't know how to deal with whatever-I-don't-know. Either way, no matter what anybody says, I don't know or care. I want what I want. Prostitution in North Korea

Prostitution in North Korea is illegal. In North Korea, prostitution takes place in small bars in some small towns, in brothels in various places around the country, and in secret locations such as the "Liberated Villages" and various hotels in Pyongyang. Prostitution is rare in other major cities. Background North Korea has historically been known as a country with a poor reputation as far as prostitution goes. Sexual relations between people living in different socio-economic levels and socio-cultural categories were forbidden in the North. This taboo is historically rooted in Confucianist and Buddhist cultural values. During the Great North Korean famine of the 1990s, prostitution was often seen as a source of income, as both women and men were only able to earn wages by working in such venues. North Korea's first registered brothels opened in Pyongyang in 1983. They are managed by a government-run state enterprise (SUNA), which was modelled after successful enterprises in Japan. The first three brothels operated with a limited number of prostitutes; since 1985, however, when the government ordered all brothels to be closed after receiving word of the fact, the number of prostitutes was double that of before. It is estimated that most brothels were run in areas such as Bukhan-dong and Dong-dong. Prostitutes in Pyongyang generally advertise for customers through a noticeboard inside each establishment. They also use intermediaries (who also act as pimps) to secure customers. Because of the long-term practice of officially banning prostitution, there are no reports of pimps being punished, but prostitutes are reported to be vulnerable to abuse.

Most of these establishments have one to four prostitutes working there who are frequently mistreated both by their clients and the management. In 2005, a North Korean defector by the name of Kim

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to electrical connectors, and particularly to an improved structure of shielding block for use with shielded cable assemblies. 2. Description of Related Art Shielded wire connectors are widely used in telecommunications and data networking for connecting to pairs of coaxial cables. Generally, the shielded wire connectors are used in pairs to engage with shielded wire cables and the shield portions of two shielded cables are put together to form a common return path for the two pairs of signals. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,125,666 to Meto et al. discloses a shielded cable connector of this kind, which comprises an insulative housing with a pair of positioning projections. The shield portions of each coaxial cable each are captured in a positioning aperture formed in a corresponding one of the positioning projections. In assembly, each coaxial cable is pushed into a positioning aperture and the positioning projections are then mounted in the housing to close the shielding block to maintain the shield portions of the coaxial cables in a predetermined relative position. However, the positioning projections are generally integrally formed with the housing and may not be easily and securely mounted in the housing. Furthermore, the relatively high flexibility of the shield block makes proper alignment of the shield portions of the coaxial cables with the positioning projections difficult. Hence, an improved shielding block is required to overcome the disadvantages of the prior art.
