cachemate.com LinkedIn A: while there are many solutions to decrypt.rar or.zip files. there is no general solution that works for all rar files. there are often a lot of failures in.rar files, e.g: text that you are trying to read from the file is mixed up with other text that is part of the file the file is compressed in a compression format that is different from the one you have so, in general, there is no easy way to do this. but we can at least make sure that the file is properly placed in the archive, i.e. you always have to start at the beginning of the file and work your way backwards to be sure of what's in the file. so you can read that backwards. so fgetc(pFile) getc(pFile) getc(pFile) etc should work fine for that if you still have problems, then you can try a different archive reader or you can try to open the file in a different archive library that is more able to handle the specific format if this is a problem for you, then write a program to do the parsing for you. there are many 3rd party libraries that can do that for you. as an example, we can try reading the file in atob/base64 format. you can see how to do this here: reading the file with atob/base64 is almost certainly the best thing to do. in general, with a.rar file, there will be many archives. if the decompressor can't decide which one to use. it will pick the first one it sees. so you want a reader that can open many different archive formats. tadaa, you can implement that like so:

int main(int argc, charargv) { int fd, i, j, chunks; char* temp, *str; chunks = 5; for (i=1; i < 6d1f23a050
```
