The use of amino acids to reduce the sodium content of medical foods and food products has been described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,957,971, 4,008,147, 4,169,002, and 4,615,882. These prior art processes can be represented by the following general chemical reaction: ##STR1## In the above general reaction, E.sub.1 and E.sub.2 represent amino acids selected from the group of glycine, L-alanine, L-glutamate, L-aspartate, L-phenylalanine and L-proline, which are all peptide precursors of the nutritionally needed amino acids found in the human diet. A related process is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,384,989 to McArthur et al., which relates to a general process of reacting a polypeptide with an amino acid to form a nutritional product having a reduced sodium content. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,923,727 and 4,923,728 to Dahl et al. relate to a process for the production of reduced sodium fortified food products from a protein having a sulfhydryl group. U.S. Pat. No. 5,110,513 to Sprung et al. relates to a process for preparing fortified food products from undenatured fish proteins. It would be of great commercial value if there were provided a simple, inexpensive and reliable process for obtaining decreased sodium nutritional products from protein sources, particularly from protein sources of the type found in meat or meat meals. To make such a process commercially feasible, it must result in useful products, such as foodstuffs and food products, which have improved nutritional and functional properties, e.g., lowered sodium content and improved nutritional values, along with good taste, texture and appearance. In addition, a process yielding low-sodium food products must be suitable for large-scale commercial production, and the process should be convenient and economical to operate. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide a process for producing reduced sodium food products from selected protein sources. It is a further object of the present invention to provide a process for producing low-sodium 6d1f23a050
