The District spent approximately $2,000,000 in payments in settlement of the two cases. Under the settlement, Hackett agreed to pay $150,000 to the District, which is being used to pay for legal fees for the District's defense in the two cases. The District was alleging that HSE engaged in an illegal money-making scheme called "mooch and scam" in which HSE paid out-of-state interns to teach in its pre-kindergarten classes, when the District had already hired those teachers. District's State Lawsuit In addition to the District's federal lawsuit filed in 2015, the District filed a lawsuit in state court in Missouri in late 2015. The District's lawsuit alleged that HSE was misusing an out-of-state education workforce participation agreement by paying its out-of-state college interns to come to Missouri and teach in Hackett's pre-K classes, as well as the District's classes. The District argued that Hackett had illegally hired the interns in violation of the state's educational law. HSE's State Lawsuit HSE filed a lawsuit in state court in 2016, alleging that the District was misusing a state statute that ensures that qualified teachers are hired to provide educational services to students throughout the state. The District's lawsuit alleged that it had already hired the interns, who had completed their students' teaching requirements. The District's lawsuit asserted that the statute's purpose was to protect students by ensuring qualified, and, most importantly, qualified educators to serve students in Missouri. HSE's lawsuit alleged that the District is misusing the state statute by hiring out-of-state, largely
