Microsoft has finally released Windows 7 SP1, a long-awaited "Service Pack".. And, like Windows Vista, it's an operating system in the shadow of Windows 8. . Hi .Q: jquery post to a controller without reloading the page I have a select input box on my view. The user would select a choice and it is posted through a controller to the view. I tried the below code. It gave a 404 error and also the page is reloading itself when posted. Any suggestions, please? $.post('../Home/UserList', {}, function (data) { $('#UserList').html(data); }); A: Which controller are you posting to? If its Home/UserList, it looks like you want to make sure that the user is using HTTPS and you're doing this from your main page or the index page. You can look at this other question for a better example and see if this is the behavior you're getting. Also, according to this StackOverflow question, I'm guessing you have an existing tag on your page with an id of UserList that is a POST to a controller that sets the data on the resulting page. That was my guess after reading your question. If not, then you'll have to edit your question or post more code for us to help.
