It seemed that the team had lost focus and failed to follow through on the concrete progress that was made in the 2006 season. It appears that the Panthers can get back on track, and the team is halfway to it already. After an embarrassing performance against the Buffalo Bills, the team fought to a 21-13 victory, mostly thanks to a steady performance from the defense. So far in the season, the offense has proven to be very inconsistent. The team has a quarterback, Seneca Wallace, who is good, but not great. He has thrown for 386 yards and three touchdowns in three games. He is not the quarterback of this team, and there is little chance that he will be the one to save it. In fact, the offensive line has not been up to the task, and the running game has had problems in every game. There have been bright spots for the Panthers, such as a 7-for-7 performance in the red zone against the Bills. There have been other bright spots in other games, but the Panthers have not come together on a consistent basis. When it comes to the defense, the Panthers have shown a great improvement over last year. In the past, the Panthers' defense was known as the best in the NFL, but they struggled the last few years. In 2007, the defense has allowed only 17 points and has been much more productive than what we have seen in the past. They have allowed nine rushing yards per c6a93da74d
